MARKET COMMENT AND OUTLOOK

Global shares experienced gains in the second quarter, with developed markets, particularly the US, leading the way while emerging markets lagged. Technology stocks were boosted by enthusiasm over Artificial Intelligence (AI). Central banks adopted a more hawkish stance, causing market expectations to fluctuate between rate cuts and potential rate hikes in 2023, with most banks raising interest rates during the period. Inflation and employment rates varied across regions. Government bond yields rose, resulting in falling prices.

In the US, the quarter started with concerns about fragility in the U.S. banking system and contagion risk. These worries subsided as the banking fallout was contained, but there are ongoing concerns about the impact of commercial real estate valuations on bank balance sheets. Equities ended the quarter higher, with most gains occurring in June. The economy showed resilience despite higher interest rates, with Q1 GDP growth revised to 2% from the previous estimate of 1.3%. The Federal Reserve raised rates by 25 bps in May and predicted two further rate rises in 2023. The S&P500 increased by 8.3%, while the Nasdaq posted +12.8% over the quarter.

In Europe, equities saw gains in Q2, led by the financials and IT sectors. Semiconductor stocks were boosted by higher-than-expected sales projections and the growth potential of Al. Both the European Central Bank and the Bank of England raised interest rates twice during the quarter. UK equities fell over the quarter, with energy and basic materials groups being the main detractors due to weak commodity prices and concerns about the Chinese economy. The FTSE posted -1.3%, the CAC +1.1%, and the DAX by +3.3%.

In Asia, Japanese shares showed strong momentum, supported by yen weakness, foreign investment, and positive economic data. However, Asia ex Japan equities faced challenges due to a cooling Chinese economy and rising interest rates. China, Malaysia, and Thailand being the worst-performing markets in the region, with China's economic rebound cooling down, affecting factory output due to lacklustre consumer spending and weak demand for exports following interest rate rises in the US and Europe. The Shanghai Composite posted -2.2%, the Hang Seng -7.3%, and the Nikkei +18.4%.

In Australia, the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) raised the cash rate by 25 bps in June, to 4.1%, which saw a total increase of 375 bps over the year. While the RBA's intention to continue raising rates is clear, the impact on consumers is yet to be fully felt. Consumer spending continues to perform well, despite consumer confidence being significantly weaker since 2021. Despite mixed consumer sentiment, the labour market and wage growth are showing resilience. In May, 76,000 jobs were added, leading to a drop in the unemployment rate to 3.6%. Interestingly, the housing market is showing early signs of a turnaround, despite expectations for further rate hikes. Traditionally, house prices tend to increase when the central bank cuts rates.

The ASX All Ordinaries posted +0.4% for the quarter, ASX 200 +0.4%, the Midcap 50 +4.2%, and the Small Ordinaries was -1.0%, respectively. The AUD struggled during the quarter, posting a -0.3% against the US Dollar (66.6 US cents), -3.2% against the Pound (52.5 pence), and -1.0% against the Euro (61.1 cents).
